A SPECIAL RACE

This man works in a café. He is a waiter. Now he is in a special race. He is walking and carrying a tray of soft drinks!

Every year, in Paris, France, there is a race for café waiters. They walk 8 kilometers (5 miles) in the streets of Paris. They carry a tray of drinks. The rules are simple: The waiters can't run—they can only walk. They can't drink the drinks. And they can't drop their tray.

More than 500 people are in the race, and many other people watch the race.
